02/07/08 Web Spoof Attacks: During the last 24 hours our Sister site at arvinalumni.org has experienced a web spoof attack where scammers send emails using the website address as their source for thousands of emails. Essentially, you would get an email that might say sal.johnson@arvinalumni.org. The point of the effort is to send thousands of emails with the hope that at least some got through. These emails would contain offers for drugs like Cialis, Viagra, and Extendz. There are others that offer software, dating services, and degrees by mail. In any case, you are smart folks (you survived AHS after all) and you get the picture. If we send you anything you will recognize it by its "mundane nature and low-profit potential". If any of you ordered Cialis, Viagra, or Extendz, let me know how it worked...If you can buy a doctorate for less than 72K and four years of advanced study, let me know about that too.
